THE MEN WHO DARE.

Across the world the ceaseless march of man. Has been through smoldering fires left by the bold. Who first beyond the guarded outposts ran. And saw with wondering eyes new lands unrolled. —Selected.

Man is a rising animal and it is no disgrace. He fought his way to the front through countless ages and the Round-up. of strife in which he brought to his aid skill and headwork as well as brawn and courage.

It is this primal love of strife and victory that accounts for the popularity of the Round-up, a show that now ranks in fact as well as in name as one of the greatest if not the greatest outdoor exhibition in the world.

There is nothing brutal or disgraceful about the Round-up, as some people who have never seen it seem to think. It is not a brutal show. It is a manly show. There are inflexible rules the men must observe in order to win events. A man cannot even hang on to the horn of his saddle while riding a buck without being disqualified. He must ride straight-up and with class in order to win. He must give his horse the best of it, and he must exercise skill, strength and brains to conquer. That is the way man has conquered all through the ages. It is what makes his superiority over the brute. If man had not possessed those qualities and used them he would not be the master over the animal kingdom.

We like the Round-up because man has not yet gone so high up the ladder of advancement that he has forgotten how he got there.

To many people one of the astounding things about the Round-up is the success with which Accommodating Pendleton accommodates the great throng of visitors within the city. "How do you do it?" asks the average man when he sees a throng of 20,000 cared for by a city with but 7000 people.

The task of providing the visitors with sleeping and eating accommodations is a monumental job and a task requiring a good executive at the head. However, it is not an impossibility for Pendleton to care for two or three times its population for that fact has been proven. In reality the feat is easier than it looks.

There is scarcely a home in Pendleton that does not provide quarters for one or more guests of some sort, relatives, friends or strangers. There are scores of homes that house as many as 20 or 30 people and do the thing fairly well, by using extra beds and cots. These home accommodations, together with the hotels, rooming houses and temporary sleeping establishments, go far towards caring for the crowd. The special trains do the rest.

Fortunately, though, it is not necessary for Pendleton to provide sleeping places for all who attend the show. Thousands are able to return to their homes at night through the use of autos, teams or by special trains from eastern Oregon and eastern Washington points.

It may be some towns even larger than Pendleton could not care for the crowds that come here. But Pendleton can and does and will handle the crowds of the future, no matter how large they may be.

It is now reported by cable that the international commission of eminent men that was to have investigated charges

War Behind Drawn Curtains. of atrocities in the Balkans has found the way blocked and that the task has been abandoned, says the Chicago Daily News.

The Greek and Serbian governments are said to have objected to two or more members of the commission on the ground that they are pro-Bulgarian. One of the members to whom objection was raised is Prof. Paul Miljukov, leader of the Russian liberals, formerly of the University of Chicago. In view of the terrible charges brought by Greece and Serbia against Bulgarian soldiers, the blocking of the proposed inquiry is most unfortunate.

The commission was to have made its investigations under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Clearly it would be better if the great nations of the world should appoint a high commission to make the needed inquiry. Recently the Commercial and Financial Chronicle called attention to the fact that an important restraint upon the conduct of armed forces operating in an enemy's country has been removed in recent years. Newspaper correspondents are no longer permitted at the front. Therefore they no longer observe the treatment accorded non-combatants and captured soldiers, wounded or otherwise. The result is that the world does not know what actually goes on within any war zone.

There can be no doubt that the presence with marching and fighting armies of alert men of high character and long experience who instantly report for world-wide publication all that they see had a powerful effect in former years in securing passable treatment of unfortunates, particularly the aged and women and children whose homes were engulfed in the tide of war. That restraining influence has practically disappeared. Newspaper correspondents are now herded far in the rear when military operations are in progress. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle truly says:

War waged behind drawn curtains can scarcely fail to be more or less neglectful of the principles underlying agreements made among the nations to mitigate the horrors of battle, siege and capture. War so waged is at least open to suspicion, since it may at any time degenerate into unrestrained savagery. In the interest of civilization, which is threatened by the spread of debasing practices that lead back to barbarism, a searching inquiry and a conclusive report on the charges of atrocities in the Balkans should be made by a properly constituted international commission.

No larger or finer bunch of daring riders, ropers and bulldozers was ever assembled than is now here and entered for the Round-up and they are giving the people their money's worth.

The Round-up is like a great river, the longer it runs the larger it becomes.

The "I Live Here" badges are good but there should be more of them.

Do Moths Like Green?

In the September Woman's Home Companion appears a department called "The Exchange," which is devoted to household necessities. One contributor writes as follows about moths and the color green:

"One of your contributors writes that moths do not like green and maintains that she has proved this by keeping moth proof a winter cloak and a fur collar in a common green cambric bag tied closely. It seems to me more probable that it was the cotton cambric that held no attraction for the pests. I know that they have no aversion to the color green for recently I was forced to burn a beautiful green cloth suit because it had become very badly moth infested."

Looks in Disfavor.

Two London cabbies were glaring at each other.

"Am, won't the matter with you?" demanded one.

"Nothin' the matter with me, you bloomin' idiot."

"You gave me a nasty look," persisted the first.

"Me? Why, you certainly 'ave a nasty look, but I didn't give it to you, so 'elp me!"
